The opportunity to gather, to reunite with old friends and meet with others I'd previously only interacted with via Zoom was more precious than words... what struck me most as I reflect on our three days together, was the camaraderie of leaders across the spectrum of Jewish day schools pausing to learn together. Our group represented Jewish schools that are as small as 24 students and as large as 800, from those based on the most stringent Orthodox ideology to those which are based on Jewish values, but which welcome students from all faith backgrounds. We came from Toronto, Kansas City, Brooklyn and San Antonio. Some of our challenges and opportunities are similar and others as unique as the communities we represent. It was a visual reminder that the diversity of our Jewish peoplehood is vibrant and strong.
